The Luxury Market Report is a monthly analysis provided by The Institute for Luxury Home Marketing. Luxury benchmark prices are determined by The Institute. This active and sold data has been provided by REAL Marketing, who has compiled the data through various sources, including local MLS boards, local tax records and Realtor.com. Data is deemed reliable to the best of our knowledge, but is not guaranteed.

- LUXURY REPORT EXPLAINED -

The Institute for Luxury Home Marketing has analyzed a number of metrics — including sales prices, sales volumes, number of sales, sales-price-to-list-price ratios, days on market and price-per-square-foot – to provide you a comprehensive North American Luxury Market report.

Additionally, we have further examined all of the individual luxury markets to provide both an overview and an in-depth analysis – including, where data is sufficient, a breakdown by luxury single-family homes and luxury attached homes.

It is our intention to include additional luxury markets on a continual basis. If your market is not featured, please contact us so we can implement the necessary qualification process. More in-depth reports on the luxury communities in your market are available as well.

Looking through this report, you will notice three distinct market statuses, Buyer's Market, Seller's Market, and Balanced Market. A Buyer's Market indicates that buyers have greater control over the price point. This market type is demonstrated by a substantial number of homes on the market and few sales, suggesting demand for residential properties is slow for that market and/or price point.

By contrast, a Seller's Market gives sellers greater control over the price point. Typically, this means there are few homes on the market and a generous demand, causing competition between buyers who ultimately drive sales prices higher.

A Balanced Market indicates that neither the buyers nor the sellers control the price point at which that property will sell and that there is neither a glut nor a lack of inventory. Typically, this type of market sees a stabilization of both the list and sold price, the length of time the property is on the market as well as the expectancy amongst homeowners in their respective communities – so long as their home is priced in accordance with the current market value.

NORTH AMERICAN LUXURY REVIEW

A Year in Review - 2023

The best way to sum up the luxury real estate market during 2023 might be that it remained "unapologetically resilient", despite a slower year in the overall sales volume compared to 2022.

Purchasing a luxury home also retained its appeal with high demand from affluent buyers still looking to realize their desire to buy a new residence. Equally they recognized that the investment opportunity remained, albeit over the longer term.

However, it was a year where buyer demand became hampered by increasing stagnation, with new listings entering the market dropping significantly month over month until the last quarter of the year.

Economic uncertainty, rising inflation and increasing interest rates, led to a growing seller resistance to list their property which further compounded the already low levels of inventory. This was, until the last quarter of 2023, when a shift that started at the end of the third quarter saw more listings enter the market, consequently opening the door for more sales.

Predictions versus Reality

Last year, we predicted that 2023 would see a softer luxury real estate market than 2022. One where properties would stay on the market for longer, prices remain high with little expectation of significant decreases, and where the affluent would base their decisions on long-term investments. All of which have materialized.

While people returned to city life and were happy to embrace smaller footprints again, this did not become a significant trend. Instead, their focus shifted to finding properties that matched their lifestyle expectations – whether that was location, amenities, move-in-ready, intrinsic value, or in many cases all four!

Expectations for a more normalized market, with activity returning to the traditional levels seen prior to the pandemic, did not materialize in the exact manner anticipated either. Hesitation and resistance continued to stall both inventory growth and price reductions expected by buyers, and sellers saw little reason to give up their affordable loan rates or reduce their prices.

Inventory Still A Major Controller

Inventory levels certainly controlled much of the buying narrative during 2023. The initial belief that the market would become more normalized was fueled by an uptick in the number of new listings entering the market during the first quarter of 2023, creating significantly higher inventory levels compared to 2022.

These numbers, however, were still 40% below traditional levels (ie. before the pandemic) and with April's announcement of further interest rates and talks of recession increasing, seller's hesitated once more and the market stagnated.

Buyer purchasing demands were also on the shift, and a trend for a move-in-ready home with amenities that matched lifestyle choices fast became the property seeing the greatest demand.

Inventory levels began to show the disconnect between buyers and sellers as properties not matching the new criteria started to build up, sitting for longer periods of time on the market. However, while inventory itself rose, the decline of new listings, particularly of high demand properties, created a dichotomy in the market.

Perception and reality are rarely in sync but by September the luxury market showed signs of an uptick in the right type of inventory entering the market. Sellers were adjusting to meet buyer preferences, the economic climate felt stronger, and the first indications of lower interest rates all contributed.

The result was a last quarter of increased new and existing inventory levels and more sales, when compared to the same quarter in 2022.

Pricing Trends Show Resilience

Experts predicted that home prices would continue to rise during 2023, but at a considerably more moderate pace. The overall luxury median price rose approximately 3% across the markets and property types analysed by the Institute.

While some luxury properties may have felt some downward pressure on their price and buyers were able to find more opportunities, it was typically in the negotiation of terms such as requesting repairs or closing costs where savings occurred.

Overall low inventory remained the biggest challenge during 2023 for many luxury markets, causing sellers to see little reason to drop their price as they perceived little competition.

Inventory, especially new inventory, is critical in the luxury real estate market. The lack of it helped stabilize the price and saw many markets remain more favorable to sellers.

Pricing at the end of 2023 is still, for the most part, controlled by lower-than-average inventory levels. Even though there was an uptick in properties listed for sale in the last quarter, pent-up demand has, for the most part, offset any negative impacts on the value of homes.

Most analysts and economists predict, according to a report from Norada Real Estate Investments, that over the next five years, prices will remain either flat or will only experience a modest decline. Paired with more robust lending standards, no one anticipates a similar price crash to the one that occurred in 2008.

Demand Trends Changed

The ‘experience’ a home offers became the significant factor in the decision-making process of the wealthy during 2023.

No matter who we talked to, savvy homeowners, luxury real estate professionals, developers, architects, and designers, they all put their emphasis on defining ‘the experience’ as part of their luxury marketing message.

The general message is that luxury is about the design, the location of the property and the property’s ability to offer a unique experience. For instance, keeping the essence of the natural surroundings while ensuring that all aspects of their lifestyle, health, privacy, and security are part of the package.

In the past, luxury properties were designed primarily for functionality, even if they were the most stunning mansions or estate homes. But, as we moved into 2023, more architectural and design emphasis was put into properties to promote wellness and well-being, including trends such as:

1. Biophilic design: This is an approach to architecture that seeks to connect its occupants closer to nature by incorporating things like natural lighting and ventilation, natural landscape features, and other elements for creating a more productive and healthier built environment for people.

2. Passive design: This reflects a philosophy of life and how the relationship with the environment should develop with the primary objective of using available resources and maximizing energy savings.
3. Sustainability design: Green architecture and environmentally conscious living are architectural trends that will prevail, offering sustainable solutions such as carbon neutral homes by using natural materials, including recycled resources.
4. Green design: Properties with extensive green spaces, including private gardens, rooftop gardens, and outdoor relaxation areas, remain desirable for health-conscious buyers.

It is predicated that interior design will continue to move in the direction of sustainability in a time when environmental awareness is crucial.

Luxury Properties Retained Their Strong Appeal

Despite the impacts of outside influences, buyers were still eager to invest in luxury real estate, especially if they could negotiate more favorable terms. Properties sold if they were priced correctly or held a special appeal to the current purchaser and, most importantly, were move-in ready – a demand that is set to remain high on the requirements for most buyers well into 2024.

Cash buyers were dominant in 2023 – previously during the low-interest rate years, even the ultra-wealthy took advantage of the historically low rates. In 2023's market, sellers were keen to work with cash buyers as the transaction was less risky because they did not rely on an institution to provide funds or change their mind on pre-approved funds.

Leveraging their cash may have been a short-term proposition for many affluent buyers, who, with an eye on the long-term investment potential of their luxury property, will at some time refinance, especially as interest and loan rates are now starting to shift downward.

Real estate is still considered to be one of the safest investments as, historically, capital values have appreciated year over year, and even though the rate of return may fall compared to the last two years, expectations are that home values will continue to climb.

As always, we highly recommend working with a luxury property specialist during this unconventional market to ascertain what is truly happening in your local marketplace. Navigating the art of selling and buying in this market needs a critical and analytical approach; understanding the realities and setting expectations accordingly will ensure that goals are achieved.
